About the Course

Background

MASHAV is the Hebrew acronym for the Israel's Agency for International Development Cooperation, a department established 50 years ago in Israel's Ministry of Foreign Affairs. MASHAV is responsible for designing and implementing Israel's international development programs, carried out in Israel and in developing partner countries.

In cooperation with the Hebrew University of Jerusalem's Robert H. Smith Faculty of Agriculture – MASHAV's only academic professional affiliate in agriculture – we are pleased to announce the opening of a training and capacity building program entitled Agricultural and Natural Resource Economics – Changes in the Era Of Globalization. The course will be held in Israel at the Robert H. Smith Faculty of Agriculture, Food and Environment, The International School of Agricultural Sciences in Rehovot, from November 4 –23, 2018.

Agriculture is still the single most important economic sector and source of employment in emerging markets. Seventy percent of the world's poor live in rural areas. In the next decades, Many of the world's poorest regions could suffer food shortage and insufficient natural resources essential for economical growth and development.

Climate change and sustainable environment call for more sophisticated and efficient agricultural technology as the world population grows and the amount of arable land decreases. According to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), farmers will have to deal with “increased potential” for extreme events like droughts, floods and heat waves,” and “enduring changes in climate, water supply and soil moisture could make it less feasible to continue crop production in certain regions.” More mouths to feed, plus less arable land and changing rainfall patterns, mean a growing need to develop methods of production from alternative resources and technological solutions that can increase productivity. In other words, there is a growing demand for more agri-green solutions that will allow farmers to do more with less while minimizing the negative effect on the environment.

Aims

The aim of this course is to provide decision-making tools that will enable the participants to confront the present and expected challenges in the agricultural sector, and to make decisions regarding management of natural resources used for sustainable agricultural production. These tools will also help deal with global financial changes, including international trade agreements and terms of trade; greenhouse gas emission reduction, environmental changes, changing rainfall patterns etc.

Israel has extraordinary experience and "know-how" in confronting these challenges, particularly when dealing with the agriculture-water-environment relationship. The course addresses these issues with a multi-disciplinary decision-making approach while focusing on the agri-environmental considerations needed under climatic changes.

The course suggests concepts methodologies and information that can be later adapted and implemented by the participant when confronting challenges in their own countries. In addition, the course promotes networking and research cooperation among the participants and the Israeli experts.

Main Subjects

The MASHAV program Agricultural and Natural Resource Economics – Changes in the Era Of Globalization offers a unique learning opportunity for mid-career practitioners and decision-makers to broaden their knowledge and perspectives on agricultural and natural resource science, policy and management. Through exposure to innovative sustainability approaches, field tours and dialogues, participants will develop the tools and skills necessary to confront global changing environments and increase food security and economic stability.

Workshop topics will be:

1. Population, Health, Wealth and the Environment: Understanding global changes and regional demographic dynamics and conceptual frameworks linking population, health, poverty/wealth and the environment. Learning successful community-based approaches for integrating population issues with natural resource management and promotion of sustainable livelihoods.
2. Policies for sustainable development: Understanding the principles of environmental policy-making and trade-off analysis with respect to land use, food, fuel and biodiversity. Learning to identify different economic instruments, including life-cycle analysis, policy options and market strategies for solving complex environmental problems such as climate change, degradation of ecosystem services, and renewable and non-renewable resource scarcity. Learning methods to assess demand for environmental amenities and develop strategies to implement change.
3. Resources and Sustainable Agricultural Management: Discussing current technologies and policy approaches that jointly promote sustainable agriculture and conserve natural resources, including agricultural production technologies, drip irrigation technologies, sludge management, land cultivation practices, eco-agriculture, and GIS tools for community-based resource monitoring.
4. Impact Assessment and Quantitative Analysis: Introduction of methods to evaluate and compare the impact of environmental, agronomic, and economic policies. Learning how to design experiments to quantify the impacts of policy interventions and how to look for and use available data to assess effectiveness of natural resources and agronomic development.
5. Mitigation and Adaptation to Climate Change: The workshop will cover three major issues:
 1. Working Landscapes and Biodiversity Conservation;
 2. Climate Change Science, Mitigation & Adaptation;
 3. Water Governance, Monitoring & Management.

The Hebrew University of Jerusalem

The Hebrew University of Jerusalem was opened in 1925, preceding the establishment of the State of Israel by more than two decades. The University was designed to be a world class institution of higher learning and research. Today, the Hebrew University comprises seven faculties, 15 schools, some 60 research centers, a student body of about 23,000 and a tenured-track faculty of some 1,500. One third of its enrollment is at the M.Sc. and Ph.D. level.

The Robert H. Smith Faculty of Agriculture, Food & Environment

The Hebrew University's Robert H. Smith Faculty of Agriculture, Food & Environment was established in 1942 in Rehovot, a city at a distance of some 55 km from the main campus of the University in Jerusalem. The site was chosen with considerations of its climate and soil conditions. It is the only agricultural institution of higher education in Israel offering university degrees. About the Course

Background

Innovation in the modern economy is a complex process involving the interactions of many actors (stakeholders) through the various stages of development of a new venture: entrepreneurs, academic and R&D institutions, and other firms (suppliers, customers, competitors, public bodies, consumers, etc.). The innovation process includes systemic interaction between participating stakeholders and is related to Public Private Partnership (PPP).

Innovation is crucial for differentiation in businesses in a world of constant change and younger generations are bringing this change about, in both the social and the business spheres.

The innovative entrepreneur is the central figure in the innovation process. The entrepreneur is the main driving force in the complex process that transforms a theoretical idea into a commercially viable product or service. However, commercializing an innovation can be extremely difficult and cumbersome for start-up innovative entrepreneurs, who face additional obstacles (compared to established firms) in the spheres of finance, technology, management, etc.

Without entrepreneurs, innovation would stagnate and economic growth would stall.

Innovation creates valuable ideas and entrepreneurship capitalizes on those ideas and gives them life. The combination of these two elements produces new businesses or business initiatives that advance industries, disrupt markets and spur economic growth.

Israel has the proven capacity to turn ideas into innovative products and services. It is within this framework that the present course is offered.

Aims

The course aims to impart tools and resources to promote the creation and expansion of business through the management of innovation processes and environments.

This will be supplemented by the opportunity for a broad exchange of experiences and lessons among Course participants, both among themselves and with their Israeli counterparts.

Main Subjects

- Good practices and policies in promoting innovative entrepreneurship; innovation-driven start-ups and the academic spin-off as engines of innovative development.
- Support systems for new entrepreneurs.
- Women entrepreneurs in a changing economy.
- Innovations in management.
- Marketing at a time of change.
- Implementation of creative initiatives – from idea to business.
- Understanding the effect of Public Private Partnership (PPP) on the creation of an Innovation Nation
- Application of the Organizational Transformation and Leadership
